We are exploring interest in forming a new film discussion group for retirees, with an emphasis on movies likely to appeal particularly to a male audience. The group would cover a broad range of genres, including science fiction, thrillers, crime dramas, war films, historical dramas, mysteries, action films, and other serious or provocative movies. The goal would be to select films that are entertaining but also provide enough substance to generate a lively discussion about their ideas, characters, realism, historical context, and overall effectiveness.

The group would also go beyond simply discussing whether we liked a movie. We would examine some of the technical and creative elements that make a film successful, including screenplay and story structure, directing, acting, cinematography, editing, sound and music, pacing, production design, and special effects. We anticipate discussing three films each month—generally one or two available through streaming services and one current theatrical release. Anyone interested in good movies and in understanding more about why some films work exceptionally well—and others do not—would be welcome. We are now looking to identify retirees who might be interested in joining the group.
